The Electric Candle.

Machinist: The electric candle is in great request in England for the lighting and decoration of dining and other tubles. An ingenious device for lighting the candles is provided by placing small pads under the tablectorh, and taking the current from them by means of two pin points in the base of the candlestick. The candles, of course, are extinguished on being taken from the table, and are relighted when they are replaced in the proper position. They are so arranged that the bulb and the glass imitation of a wax candle can be removed, when the candlestick can be used for an ordinary candle. When used with shades of colored slik, the electric candle makes one of the prefitest additions to a dinner table that is possible to imagine.

Sir Robert Peel, speaking of Lord Eldon, emarked that "even his failings lean'd to virtue's side;" upon which a gentleman observed his lordship's failings resembled the saning tower of Pisa, which, despite long Inclination, has never gone over.

A Portuguese arfificer, who was suspected A Jesuit who came to confess him, holding a crucifix before his eyes, said: hold the God whom you have much offended. Do you recollect Him now?" "Alas! yes, father," replied the dying man, "it was I who made him."

Perhaps the neatest reproof to a long-winded preacher was that given by Harvey Combe when lord mayor to Dr. Parr. As they were coming out of church together, Parr was so foolish as to ask the other how he liked his sermon, "Well, doctor, to speak frankly there were four things in it that I did not like to hear. They were the quarters of the church clock which struck before you had finished."

A youth to fortune and to fame unknown A youth to fortune and to fame unknown sent Dumas the manuscript of a new play, asking the great dramatist to become his collaborateur. Dumas was for a moment petrified, then he seized his pen and replied: "How dare you, sir, propose to yoke together a horse and an ass?" The author, by return post, wrote: "How dare you, sir, call me a horse?" Dumas, by next mall: "Send me your play, my friend."

In Philadelphia, the other day, an old lady from the country took her stand directly in the center of a trolley track. She soon spied a messenger boy, who, with hat perched on one side, was coming along whistling a popular air. "Say, little boy," inquired she, "would you tell me where I could get a trolley car?" "Yes, ma'am," was the prompt reply, "stand where you are, an' you'll get one right in the neck."

A gentleman in Washington who has for years made 2 practice of gathering personal anecdotes of veterans of the war, both of the Northern and Southern services, once asked a friend, who had fought all through the war, if he had ever killed a man that he positively knew of. "Yes," said he, remorsefully, "one. At Bull Run I ran at the first fire, A rebel chased me for ten miles, and was then so exhausted that he dropped dead."

A clever writer who was paying a short visit at a farm house was handed by the daughter of the house a superannuated account book, ruled for pounds, shillings and pence, which had been converted into an album, and in which she requested him to write something funny. He complied with her request by penning the following verse, which, after some bewilderment, she managed to read: £ 8. d.

It has come to such a fad nowadays for young men with a fondness for brie-a-brae to confiscate small articles of glass and china from the table when dining privately at hotels that the managers figure on it china from the table when dining privately at hotels that the managers figure on it when contracting for large dinners. One of these young men, at a large dinner in a Boston hostelry the other night, had cleverly tucked away three wine glasses, a small spoon and a coffee cup. When he was just slipping the saucer under his coat, the big black waiter who was collecting dishes came up opposite him with a pile of them about two feet high, and rolling his face into a genuine Georgia grin, he asked: "Say, boss, doan" yuh wanter take dese along, too?"

A Jewish banker of ludlerously Hebraic cast of countenance, while at Monte Carlo recently, struck up a great friendship with the Comte de L.—, the wittlest humpback in Paris. As the latter was about to return to the city on the Seine, in taking leave of the banker he expressed the pleasure he had found in his society and hoped that whenever the banker was in Paris he would renew the acquaintance. "Delighted, my dear count," exclaimed the flattered banker; "I should be charmed. But your friends in Paris have—er—rather unadvanced ideas. In fact, I must acknowledge that I am a Jew." "That's all right," replied L.—, pressing his hand cordially, and then, in the banker's ear, he added: "And I, too, must make a confession—I am a humpback."

"And I, too, must make a confession—I am a humphack."

Jerome K, Jerome tells in his paper, ToDay, of glving a little dinner once, and discussing the matter of wine with the headwaiter before the guests arrived, "Well," said the waiter, "if you take my advice, you will give them a very good champagne and let that go round twice. After that sir,—well—here's a very good wine that I always recomment at 5 shillings the bottle; and then, if I were you, sir, I would finish up with this," and he pointed to a modest little brand at three and six. "And don't you think," Jerome said, "that they will notice the difference?" "Lor' bless you, Eo, sir," said the man; "we generally do it that way. I wouldn't undertake to tell the difference myself between champagne at 15 shillings and champagne at 5 after the first two glasses."

At the trial of an action for libel brought

At the trial of an action for libel brought by Dr. Levingston against the San Francisco Civic Federation, Forter Ashe, a friend of Levingston, and himself an attorney, was called as a witness. He testified regarding a certain letter, ostensibly written by him alone; he admitted, with apparent reluctance, that he. Ashe, had assisted in preparing it. When asked if others were concerned, his apparent reluctance to reply was so great that the plaintiff's attorney at once objected. The defendant's attorney, scenting some damaging admission behind the unanswered question, passed the matter. For half an hour the attorneys argued, and finally, after a mighty war of words, the court decided that the question might be put. So put it was "Who," said the defendant's attorney, impressively, "was the person present beside yourself and Dr. Levingston?" To which the ingenuous Mr. Ashe, who had sat in silence throughout the legal battle, replied, blandly, "Nobody." At the trial of an action for libel brought

The Wonderful Human Fish.

One of the oddest human freaks that ever saw the light of day in the United States or, possibly, in any other country, is Herman Schepler, who was born at Cieveland, O., in 1884. At last accounts the little fellow was living with his parents on St. Clair street, in the above named city, and was as bright and happy as boys of his age usually are. Herman has a handsome, intelligent looking face, and shapely, sunburnt hands. In fact, to all outward appearance, he is an ordinary boy, but those who know him best say that the only parts of his anatomy that are covered with common human skin are his face, neck, hands and feet, and that the other portions of his bedy are literally encased in tiny, dark blue fish scales. From the neck to the ankles this wonderful coat of mail so thoroughly covers the body that not the slightest section of skin bearing any semblance to that of the human being is visible. The family were perfectly horror stricken when the little "lish baby" was born, and for more than seven years mannaced to keep the matter a profound secret. However, little Herman's playmates linally learned that their companion was a veritable lish. This soon leaked out and the matter became public. I understand that doctors and professors who have recently examined the boy are unanimous in pronouncing him to be the "eighth wonder of the world."

A Lion, Several Goats, Talking Birds and a Pet Snake Among Them.

In Algeria, North Africa, the officers of the Third Chasseurs d'Afrique have a pet lion which they took, when very young, from the African desert. It is a great pet and very gentle. As a rule it lays outside the officers' mess on the veranda, and looks just like an artificial one. Many have been the visitors who took to flight on beholding his majesty rise to greet his guests. The lion by way of assuring them that he was harmless, or perhaps as a sign of his disapproval of their impolite actions, would generally send a gentle roar after them, which, instead of recalling them, would make them increase their pace, if it were possible to do so.

In the British army several regiments have pets. For instance, the Twenty-third Weish Fusileers have a pet goat that marches in front of the regiment. The Seventy-fourth Highland Light Infantry, the Seventy-eighth Scaport Highlanders and other corps have pet deer that also march in front.

In India the soldiers make many pets, and other corps have pet deer that also march in front.

In India the soldiers make many pets, such as monkeys, parrots, owls, crows, hawks and squirrels; but their greatest pet is the minot, a bird like a starling, but larger. This bird after having his tongue split will talk quite well, and will follow his master about constantly. Offen it will follow a dragoon regiment for four or five miles on a field day, and will fly round and round the regiment until he will settle, even though the horses are going along at full gallop.

A trooper in the Cape Mounted Riffes in South Africa had a green water snake for a pet, which would follow its master through the grass to the river and go in bathing with him. The trooper, who was an expert swimmer, would worry the snake by diving under water and coming up a dozen yards away. He fed it on frons, raw mean and little fish. It slept in his jack boot at hight. He, however, was not domed to have though as for a pet, and would follow her about like a

Mr. Ferry Has Not Arrived.

Washington. June 22.—(Special.) The comptroller of the currency has been expecting John Ferry, receiver of the Nation! Bank of Kansas City. to reach town for some days, owing mainly to the fact that quite a large amount of mail has collected for him, sent in care of the comptroller. So far he has not put in an appearance and it is understood that he is delayed in New York.

A Boy's Arm Broken.

Clarence Swallow, 7 years old, son of E. W. Swallow, of No. 1745 Holly street, broke his right arm in two places at 7:30 o'clock last night, while playing with some of his companions in front of his home. He was carled to police headquarters in his father's arms. Police Surgeon Hyde applied a bandage to the arm and he was taken
